Royal Victoria Hospital Adaptive Reuse Project.

With this newsletter, the Société québécoise des infrastructures (SQI) wishes to share the latest news and upcoming steps in the former Royal Victoria Hospital adaptive reuse project.

Feasibility analysis for an international multiuniversity housing project

SQI is pleased to announce an agreement with the Caisse de dépôt et placement du Québec (CDPQ) and the Government of Quebec to analyze the feasibility of a world-class multiuniversity student housing complex serving Montreal universities on the site of the former Royal Victoria Hospital.

Such a complex would consolidate the site's research and teaching vocation, while considerably increasing the supply of student housing in Montreal. Local shops and services could also be added to provide an attractive living environment for those who frequent the site.

The project is in line with proposals submitted at the Office de consultation publique de Montréal (OCPM) hearings on the Master Plan and is based on the models of international university houses developed in several major cities around the world, such as Paris and New York.

Together with the McGill University project, this new partnership has the potential to breath new life into vacant and surplus buildings left unoccupied when the majority of the hospital's operations were moved to the Glen site in 2015.

The project will be developed in keeping with the values of the Mount Royal Heritage Site Conservation Plan, the major orientations of the current Master Plan, and the commitments of the Development Agreement between SQI, the City of Montreal and McGill University.

For more information, we encourage you to read the Government of Quebec press release (in French) ; the web page of the word-class university hub ; and the web site of the Master Development Plan (in French).
